Excerpt: . . . advocates of and helpful agents in the pioneer work of draining the lands of Illinois, Iowa, and Indiana. They sent representatives to the conventions. made low transportation rates on drain tile and ditching machinery, and were liberal in treating assessments which were made against their properties for carrying out public and private drainage improvements. With these few words of introduction, I ask your permission to defer to others the presentation of technical and constructive phases of the subject. and at this time to call attention to some related topics which I have in mind. Drainage in this State has been advanced largely through educational methods comprising public meetings devoted to the discussion of local drainage, the enactment of a State drainage law with its several amendments and through the persistent activities of this Association, I should not fail to add to these agencies the examples of satisfactory drainage which are more forceful and instructive than all others. I hold that landowners should be informed on the principles and value of all basic land improvements like drainage, but that they should call to their aid the drainage engineer when they contemplate carrying out any extended work. This suggests the training that such engineers should have and what their clients. the landowners, should expect of them. We have had the matter up with our friends at the State University. They are of the opinion that if they teach in a regular way the mathematics, the surveying....
